Marginalization and Discrimination

Paulo Borges & Danielle Harris

Principles of justice are uniquely reflected in Christian identity. Learning from the past and experiences of injustice especially through discriminatory practices that continue to imprint current generations underscores the need for God's justice which can be introduced into pluralistic cultures of the world through institutions of higher learning with a faith-based premise.

Integrated Learning in Higher Education

As global forces introduce the need for integration of disciplines and systems, higher education must engage in probing its unique contribution to forming a culture that thinks and behaves in integrated ways. Truth and discovery are inherently integrated in nature. Higher education that innovates around integration will provide holistic hope to solving cultures most challenging questions and shaping new generations in the foundation of God's justice.
